

How To Draft A Will

STEP 1—Come to grips with the fact that you, on an actual day in the ever-approaching future, will cease having any experiences or sensations whatsoever and will simply not exist for the rest of eternity.

STEP 2—Great. Now, let's divvy up your stuff. Over many decades, do your best to accumulate enough garbage to make any of this worth it.

STEP 3—Make your wishes known while you're still around. Sit your children down and tell them you want a good, clean fight.

STEP 4—Delineate and assign roles for the Executor, Beneficiaries, and the one person responsible for avenging your death.

STEP 5—Reserve a wild-card slot for anyone cool you might meet before you die.

STEP 6—Include specific instructions for handling your remains. Do you want them poured out during the final drop of Splash Mountain or along the entire ride?

STEP 7—Make time to meet with an attorney to lay out a detailed, comprehensive map to leave to the youngest and most unassuming of the family.

STEP 8—You don't need the entire thing to be in legalese—include a personal note or two at the end about how bummed you are about being dead.

STEP 9—Have your Will witnessed to prevent those you disinherited from wiggling their way back in.
